HONGKONG, JULY 16TH, 1888.

In the course of his annual report, the Superintendant of the Government Civil-Hospital incidentally touches on still fish as a probable cause of cholera, and quotes Dr. Macnamara's opinion that few more certain sources of this disease exist than fish that has gone bad. He adds:—"As fish enters largely into the diet of the population of Hongkong it is advisable that particular attention should be paid to the fish supply of the Colony." There can be no manner of doubt that a very large proportion of the great quantity of fish consumed in the summer months, to say the last of it, side. Even that placed on the tables of foreigners often has to be dismissed as tainted, the great heat soon having a putrefying effect upon it. Dr. Macnamara states that keeping fish of this kind in boiling water for some time does not destroy its pernicious qualities. A great portion of the fresh fish for which there is not an immediate sale is slightly salted by the dealers, and sold as fresh fish. Whether it is absolutely wholesome in this form we are not prepared to say; it is not very palatable, and is frequently sent away from the table by foreigners as uneatable. Of course the great object of the market connoisseurs is to get rid of their wares without a loss, and it happens as a consequence that consumers now and again get food which is neither toothsome nor wholesome. Dr. Arkison's suggestion with regard to the fish supply therefore merits attention, and we trust will receive it. The meat supply is carefully inspected, but it is doubtful whether any sufficient supervision is exercised over the fish supply.

In to-day's issue will be found the concluding chapter of Mr. Arkison's story "The Bondman." We have been unable to procure the rest of these stories on fixed days, but the instalments of "The Bondman" shall appear weekly, on Wednesday if possible.

The case of Yau-keung v. Rustomjee, which was the subject of our last column, was heard on the 14th July, when the plaintiff accepted an offer of £1,300 and paid his own costs. An offer of £1,500 was made by the plaintiff three weeks ago.

Says the Strait Times:—"The Resident

Councillor of Malacca, in his Administration

Report for the previous year, says that tin is to be found well all over the colony. A great proportion of it is fairly sound and good,

but much that is stale and semi-rotten finds a sale at a cheap rate to the Chinese, with the inevitable result of causing a vast amount of sickness in the shape of bowel complaints and cholera diarrhoea. The Chinese lower classes are for the most part children, and will eat anything that pleases their palate, especially if it be obtainable at a low price. No hawker or market vendor should be allowed to sell fish which is either distinctly unripe or spoiled as sample.

sound, any more than butchers are inclined to send bad meat or fishmongers to expose for sale putrid fish. At such a time as the present, when the thermometer stands unusually high, exceptional pains should be taken by the Authorities to inspect the food supply of the Colony.

Mr. W. E. Chow, the Government Analyst, in his report for last year, makes an important recommendation, namely, that the sale of poisons should be controlled by law. The writer is only incidentally alluded to, in being Mr. Chow's intention to lay his views on it before the Government at length in a special communication. That criminal poisoning is a very common crime in the colony there is unfortunately only too good reason to believe. If the sale of the drugs used for this purpose could be brought under Government control it certainly ought to be done, but the difficulties in the way seem to render any attempt in that direction almost hopeless. Such a law as Mr. Chow proposes could only work effectively with the co-operation and support of the drugmen and the public. To carry on the business of a druggist in this colony no recognised qualification is required by law. A Sale of Poisons Ordinance would under these circumstances be much more difficult to work than in England, where the chemists law might require that persons keeping a drug shop should take out a licence and be registered, but this would not carry us much farther, for there would still remain the absence of special training for the business and if any question arose under such a law as that proposed by Mr. Chow the parties implicated could plead ignorance without suffering the penalties that would attach to such a plea in England by a man supposed to have established his qualification by passing an examination. Nor could much support be looked for from the Chinese public, who would look upon the new law, if ever came to their knowledge at all, as a new fangled foreign idea which did not concern them. If Mr. Chow, in the special communication he proposes to address to the Government, can show how the difficulties in the way can be met, he will render a valuable service to the colony. One of the commonest poisons used is datura, which, as Dr. Arkison says in his report on the work of the Civil Hospital for last year, is "evidently much used by the Chinese as a stupefying agent. Administered in sufficient doses it would of course cause death, but its chief use amongst the Chinese is to deprive the victim of his senses for a time while some crime is committed of which it is desired he should remain in ignorance. In the case reported by Dr. Arkison five men were admitted to the hospital suffering from the effects of the drug. On recovery they informed the doctor that after partaking of food which contained the poison they became giddy and forgot all that happened afterwards. The Datura is a common plant in the island, and there are also other common plants with the toxicological properties of which the Chinese are well acquainted. Mr. Chow says it will of course be urged that the usefulness of such a measure as he proposes, in respect of the sale of vegetable poisons, is by no means evident, seeing that there are growing wild in the colony, the very plants which furnish the drugs the sale of which it is proposed to control, and that a criminal would be hardly likely to purchase of a druggist or herbologist a poison which he could gather without much trouble in the colony. Objections of this character, Mr. Chow allows, are entitled to some weight, but he answers them by saying that a perusal of the records of the crime of murder by poisoning will show that the criminal, in matters of detail, is by no means as astute as people imagine. The fact of a plant's being readily accessible is, of course, no reason why the sale of the poison derived from it should not be controlled, although the drug may be widely known by name the proportion of people who would be able to identify the plant would probably be comparatively small, and in some cases the mere fact of having to go some distance to look for it themselves instead of being able to buy it at a cheap rate in a shop would be sufficient to prevent its use. What strikes me as the real difficulty is that the keepers of native drug shops are too uncertain in body to be brought under anything like effective control.

There will be a game of polo at 6 p.m. today (Tuesday) on the Causeway Bay ground.

The usual weekly entertainment will not take place at the Sailor's Home this (Tuesday) evening.

General Manuel Rodriguez de Rivera, the Commander-in-chief of the troops in the Philippines, died on the 4th instant.

The Agents (Messrs. Stamford & Co.) inform us that the D. B. steamer Elvira, from Hamburg, left Singapore yesterday for this port.

According to the return of the Curator of the City Hall Museum, 135 Europeans and 2,004 Chinese visited that institution during the week ended the 14th inst.

The prospects of the Hongkong Marine Legion will be found in another column. The project has been largely discussed since its first announcement, and seems to have hit the fancy of the public.

We learn from the Courrier d'Haiphong that M. d'Abbadie had left Haiphong for Hongkong, to make the visit of the Red River.

We learn from the Courrier d'Haiphong that the case on hearing for hearing this morning in the Supreme Court was learned settled out of Court yesterday evening, the plaintiff accepting £1,300 and paying his own costs.

There is no doubt that the Chinese Government will do all it can to defend the plaintiff in this case. This will be a great improvement on the present building now occupied as a Male Look Hospital; this latter will be handed over to the Colonial Surgeon and used as a Female Look Hospital, this being the object for which it was originally intended.
